Lawn Grub Control

When lawn grubs invade your lawn, they can cause extensive damage, especially to the root system of the grass. Lawn grubs live in the soil during the colder months, but their presence can be identified by locating patches of brown or dead grass on the lawn. Since they are notoriously difficult to get rid of, it is important to understand where the problem is concentrated and how to deal with the pests. Our experts will determine the most effective treatment plan to control and prevent lawn grub problems in the future.

Crabgrass Pre-emergent and Post-emergent

Crabgrass is a problematic weed that can take over your lawn, compromising both the health and appearance of the area. One of the reasons why it is difficult to deal with is because it can spread fast. Mowing your lawn in the right way, soaking the lawn and careful use of herbicides can help in managing the problem. We will help you get rid of crabgrass by digging it up and replacing the area with new sod.
